

Career Development Fellowship (in association with a college)

This is a developmental role which will ideally suit those aspiring towards an academic career. You will gain a portfolio of research and teaching experience, as well as contributing to the wider life of the academic community in a world class, vibrant department. This role is aimed at those who are in the early stages of their academic career and who have been awarded a PhD in the past five years or be about to complete.

Role Specifications

- Up to 4 posts per annum
- Typically advertised during Hilary term (January onwards)
- Full-time fixed term contract for 4 years commencing in Michaelmas term (October)
- One term of paid research leave in the fourth and final year
- Salary in the range of £31,076 - £36,001 p.a.

Key Responsibilities

- Undergraduate teaching and administration for the college
- Admissions assessment and interviews
- Teaching for the department and examination marking
- Research with a view to publishing in international journals

The Opportunity

- A structured development opportunity
- Mentoring support from a senior academic staff member will be provided
- Tailored package of professional development
- Contracted to the University with access to an attractive benefits package

About You

- You will have a high level of academic achievement
- You should have obtained a PhD by December of the year of commencing the role and should not normally have completed a PhD or equivalent earlier than 1 October 5 years earlier (with the exception of career breaks, e.g. for maternity / paternity leave)
- You will have the ability or potential to provide excellent tutorial and small group teaching
- Previous teaching experience is an advantage